

FOSS NOW IS NAMED FOR VICE PRESIDENT

Bay State Governor-Elect Developing Into Strongest Candidate of Democrats.

MARKED AS WINNER IN TWO CAMPAIGNS

Intimate Friends Say, However, That Presidency Alone Is Goal of Massachusetts Man.

While Presidential possibilities are being considered as a result of the Democratic landslide of last Tuesday, there is a great deal of quiet talk in Washington regarding the most effective Vice Presidential timber which the election developed. Governor-elect Eugene N. Foss, of Massachusetts, is by long odds the favorite.

While Mr. Foss was mentioned for the second place on the Democratic ticket in 1912 at the time he carried the strong Republican district for Congress, he did not loom up one-half as big as he does now as the next Democratic governor of a New England State.

It is very generally agreed here that Foss is the man for the running mate of the Democratic nominee. Certainly this is true if the head of the ticket comes from the West. If the East should furnish the nominee for the Presidency, then Foss' chances would not be so favorable.

Claims of South.

It is very true that the South every four years puts forward its claim to a place on the Democratic ticket. It argues that the section below the Ohio river can always be depended upon to furnish a solid vote for the ticket, and that some recognition should be given it. This view has not prevailed, however, in a great many years.

The South is too "solid." If that section's vote was doubtful, it would be in a position to negotiate for position, but it has been the practice of Democratic conventions in the past to give the Vice Presidential nomination to a section where there were votes to be gained.

According to the best posted politicians here, Foss is certainly being offered the Vice Presidential nomination should Governor Harmon or some other Western man be named to head the ticket.

Marked As a Winner.

The brilliant record made by the governor-elect in his race for Congress, and in his fight for the governorship, mark him as a winner.

Whether or not Mr. Foss would take the Democratic nomination is quite another question. His intimate friends say that his ambition is to be the head of the ticket, and that he would not consider the second place as long as there was the slightest hope of his being the nominee for the Presidency. In any event, the Democrats who mean to make the tariff the big issue of the next Presidential campaign feel comfortable over the fact that they have in Foss a strong and successful advocate of revision who is admirably located to take the Vice Presidential nomination when the time comes.

PROF. JAMES BACK, SAYS SPIRITUALIST

Death a Sleep and An Awakening Is Burden of Message.

BOSTON, Nov. 12.—Prof. William James has come back. It is said at Ayer's Spirit Temple in Boston.

Messages said by M. S. Ayer, head of the temple, to have come from Prof. James, tell all about life, death and the vast hereafter. They did not surprise spiritualists in Boston as Prof. James said before his death that if he had the time and the opportunity he would drop his friends a few lines from whatever place he went to.

Under date of October 17, Prof. James, in apostrophic mood and apparently just awakening from a posthumous swoon, exclaimed audibly to Ayer in the temple, "And this is death; only to fall asleep; only to awaken in the morning and know that all is well. I am not dead, only arisen."

A week later Prof. James became remissent and said that a child he had awesomely regarded death, but that as he grew older he came to regard it as merely the passing of the old into the new. When death finally came to him, he declared in the message to Ayer's Temple, he sensed no feeling of terror and was hardly conscious of the change that took place, but felt a great shock throughout his whole system. After momentary unconsciousness, Prof. James told Ayer, he awoke to find himself standing beside his outworn body, about which were friends.
